

CRO Heuristic Guidelines

In my experience, conversion occurs as a result of the influence of five dimensions, which, together, answer the fundamental questions users will ask during their buying journey.

VALUE PROPOSITION

Does the content communicate value to the user ?

TRUST

Does the page build trust in the user's perception?

CLARITY

Is content on the page presented as clearly as possible?

MOTIVATION

Does the content motivate and encourage the user to take action towards the goal?

FRICTION

What is causing doubts, fears, hesitations & difficulties?

UX Heuristic Total Scores

● 0-40 ● 40-79 ● 80-100

The scores are based on averages and help us identify where key opportunities are. Although the key areas of opportunity are in value and motivation, it's important to "get the basics right" first.

These scores suggest there's some fundamental issues with value, motivation and trust which should be addressed first.

VALUE 50%

- Headline leads with features, not outcomes
- The site fails to communicate what Anomaly is and what transformation it delivers within the first seconds

FRICTION 80%

- CTAs doesn't stand out
- Multiple friction points and unanswered objections make the purchase feel risky, especially for first-time buyers committing to a subscription for their children.

MOTIVATION 43%

- Emotional content buried past the midpoint; no results section, no transformation stories
- No urgency elements into the website

CLARITY 43%

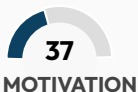

- The site leads with rational, jargon-heavy, feature-based messaging instead of connecting emotionally with parents' real anxieties and desires.

TRUST 56%

- No customer photos, no video testimonials
- No "As Seen In" / "Featured In" press logos
- No money-back guarantee visibility
- Expert carousel requires interaction to see more than 1 testimonial

Heuristic Insights

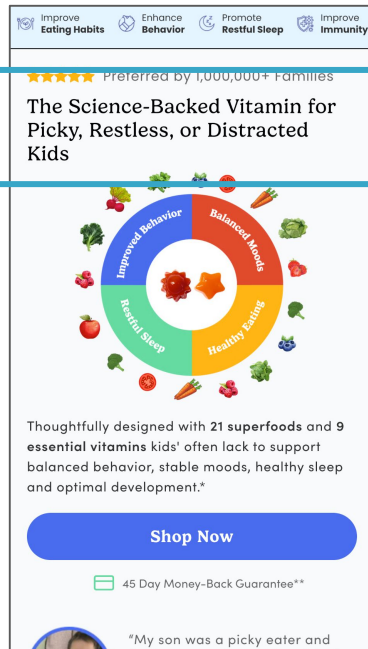

- ▶ The current headline is confusing and does not clearly explain what the product is or who it is for
- ▶ We are using technical bullet points instead of describing the problems we solve or emotional angles
- ▶ Even though the image is clear, we can add even more images showing real situations, people using the product, and clarifying the product features
- ▶ The main benefits of the ingredients are not clear, and the animated banner is hard to read
